

Recognised Colour Trends in Exterior House

Colour in home interior is very important thing that have chosen before setting up the other exterior thing. The harsh south-western sun makes it challenging to sustain the paint condition of the exterior of home and commercial buildings. An additional challenge is presented when Home Owners Associations dictate the colour palette a home owner may choose their paint colours from.

Colour can be used to highlight or downplay your home or building architectural details (or lack there of). For example, painting the eaves and fascia the same colour as the walls will make a short building look taller, while painting them the same colour as the roof will make a tall building look shorter. Columns, pop-out window details or trim can be highlighted with accent colour to draw the eye towards them. It is crucial not to forget the larger environment in which the building stands. While you want to stand out, you must also fit in. The goal is to fit in to your environment, but also get noticed. Colour choices will convey an unspoken message. Ask yourself the following questions:

Robert Shapario, the executive director for Colour Guild, says the main colours emerging in commercial buildings over the next year include warm and rich browns, earthy oranges, bright yellows, conservative reds, true blues and mid-tone to light greys. For the individual home owner, rich brown/red tones and muted greens also fit in the palette.
