

About Current Trends in Home Decoration

One of the biggest trends in design nowadays is the idea of mixing and matching different styles and eras in an effort to create a room or feeling that is uniquely that of the individual who owns the home. As in all areas of design and fashion, there are certain things that are currently in fashion for home décor that were not popular a few years ago. Some of these trends involve major purchases and re-decorating while some require nothing but a little bit of paint. While being trendy is important, that individuals who are planning on selling their home in the very near future try to keep the home as neutral as possible. Neutral does not have to be boring and it also can retain some of the current trends.

Now it is no longer enough for a manufacturer or store to say something is green as customers are now demanding proof that the process by which the furniture or fabric was created is truly green, sustainable, and meet with the standards of Fair Trade. One of the biggest areas this is being seen is in fabrics. Adding silk-like eco-bedding to an individual's already-organic linens vocabulary is one of the easiest ways to add a touch of eco-friendliness to a home. The silk-like linens are created from organic materials like processed wood-pulp and are dyed in a way that gives the fabric gorgeous colours but also does not use a toxic dye.

You have to know that one of the biggest trends right now is the idea of incorporating multi-cultural décor into a home. Current popular sources of inspiration include China, Russia, Latin America, Morocco, and India. These trends can all stand alone or can be mixed to create something of an around-the-world feel to a home. A final design trend is that of pattern. Art nouveau and art deco have leant their emphasis to botanicals, paisley, brocade, animal prints, and geometric patterns that are all popping up in decorative accessories and furnishings.
